The small boy who puffs eigarettes on the street should bear in mind that the Legislature has passed a law making it a misdemeaner to sell cirgarettes to a per son under sixteen years of age, and that he is liable to be annunoued before the grand jury and made to tell where be purchased the little smoker. Tobacc dealers who sell digarettes should also govern themselves accordingly.

The Flood ot 1891.

Wheeling has experienced another great flood, but amid all the inconveriesces and suffering therefrom there is cause for thankfulness that the destruction of property is not so great as in the last overflow in 1884, and that the worst apprehensions, expressed when the alarming reports came from above on Tuesday, were not realized. The situation is bad enough, however, and those who are the chief sufferers have the hearty sympathy of their more fortunate fellow citizens who live on high ground and out of reach of the merciless water

The flood was remarkable, principally because it was unlooked for, coming at a time when there were no heavy snows few days. Until the reports came from Pittsburgh of the sudden rise there, no one expected that the river at this point would reach more than the ordinary would reach more than the ordinary and drave three customers into a corner high-water stage. This belief was strengthoused by the news that the West band over $75. Virginia tributaries were at their usual stage and that no heavy rains had occurred on the head waters of the Monon gahela. But when it became known gahela. But when it became known that a great volume of water was rushing out of the Youghiogheny and Allegheny rivers and that the dead gains would be given by the dead gains with a dead gains with the dead gains would be given by the dead gains with the dead the flood of 1884 would be rivaled at Pituburgh the anxiety at Wheeling was intense. The difference in the conat Pitteburgh the anxiety at Wheeling was intense. The difference in the conditions prevailing now and those that prevailed in 1884 gave room for hope throat, killing him instantly. Kincaid made his earth and the second cut his prevailed in 1884 gave room for hope throat, killing him instantly. Kincaid that, whatever the effects above might be, they would not be as disastrous here as in that year. Then there was a very heavy snow covering the whole of the country between here and the headwaters, and its rapid melting under a steady rain increased the volume of water coming from every stream empty-water coming from every stream emptying into the river above. Such was not the case this year and Wheeling was happily epared the experience of 1884, and probably something a great deal worse.

The principal danger from a flood is along the river below. Parkersburg, Marietta, Huntington, and all the towns to Cincinnati and below must inevitably suffer great damage, greater than the low districts of Wheeling.

The greatest suffering in this immediate vicinity must be borne by the class of citizens who can least afford it class of citizens who can least afford it and to the railroad companies. Many on the Island and in South Wheeling whose houses have been flooded are people of limited means, who depend upon daily employment for their liveli. hood. Great damage has been done to their household goods and other property-to what extent cannot be ascertained until the water subsides. The INTELLIGENCER is sure that in such cases where immediate relief is needed, if there are any, it will be forthcoming from those who have been spar-ed the effliction, and to those in the those portions of the West, and where malarial Ohio Valley below us, who are atill less and typhold fevers prevail at certein seasons of the year.
